WHO & WHAT'S NEW FOR 2015

Squaw Valley Plans Base to Base Gondola Connection with Alpine Meadows: For years, Andy Wirth and Troy Caldwell have skied the North Lake Tahoe resorts of Squaw Valley and Alpine Meadows together. Wirth is the President and CEO of Squaw, and Caldwell owns the 460 acres of private property that separates Squaw from its neighbor Alpine. And so their chairlift conversations led to the April 13 announcement that Squaw Valley Ski Holdings, LLC plans to connect the two resorts with a base-to-base lift.

They aren't the first to imagine a connection between the resorts. Alpine's snowy bowls are easily spotted from Squaw's KT-22, a storied peak known for the steep terrain that spills down its north flank to the resort village. The physical connection moved closer to realization when KSL Capital Partners bought Squaw in 2010 and then merged that ski area with Alpine in 2011 to offer 6,000 acres of terrain on one pass. This recent announcement came after a legal agreement that allows Squaw to build and maintain a lift on Caldwell's property, known as White Wolf. It's similar to an existing contract between the two parties: Squaw already leases Caldwell's land atop KT-22 for resort operations. Guests currently move between Squaw and Alpine via a free shuttle. The proposed base-to-base gondola would be the first on-mountain infrastructure to link the two. "It's definitely a dream come true," says Caldwell.

$50 Million Dollar Makeover at Park City/Canyons: The Park City Planning Commission gave unanimous approval for Vail Resorts' plan to build an interconnecting gondola between Park City and Canyons ski areas, among other capital improvements totaling $50 million. The end result will reportedly represent the largest single ski area in the U.S., with more than 7,300 acres of skiable terrain.

U.S. SKI AND SNOWBOARD HALL OF FAME INDUCTION 2015: America's Ski Town U.S.A., Steamboat Springs, honored ten new inductees to the U.S. Ski and Snowboard Hall of Fame on April 11th. Those inductees included: Olympic champion snowboarder Ross Powers, World Alpine Championship medalist Erik Schlopy, noted big mountain skier Chris Davenport, ski instruction pioneer Curt Chase, and goggle innovator Bob Smith. Others include resort designer Joe Cushing, World Cup race winner Kristina Koznik, alpine development leader John McMurtry, women's innovator Jeannie Thoren and Ralph Miller, one of the great American ski racers from the 1950's.

FAR WEST ANNUAL CONVENTION IS TWO MONTHS AWAY
