== No. 104, August 2009 ==

Mountain High Snowsport Club, PO Box 2182, Portland, OR 97208

From the Prez

Hi again; I know we are all just waiting for Snow to fall after the 100 plus week we have gone through. Enough of this heat. A positive thought is that at our August 1st meeting we are planning some great winter events. Emilio is planning his "MYSTERY trip" where no-one knows where we are going but him and everyone has a great time. Other ski trips are being planed, along with a Wine tour to Yakima in September. See details inside our Award winning Lift Lines.

We are sooo lucky to have such great support and ideas from our board and others at the meetings. Come to the next meeting and get involved, remember, "You only get back what you put in". I can't thank everyone that attended our last meeting enough for helping to create "the best ski club ever". Your participation is so valuable. We have over 50 people rafting this year and that will enjoy Lou's-"Q" BBQ dinner Sat. night on the Deschutes river trip.

Mt. High is making donations to the US Ski Team and the Mt. Hood Cultural Museum event in September.

See you at the picnic or Raft trip and enjoy your summer. Snow will fly early enough...

Your Prez. Gordy Lusk

Mt. Hood Museum Heritage Day

Heritage Day is an annual celebration of the history of Mt. Hood, and is usually marked by a series of events around the Mt. Hood Museum, tours of Government Camp, a vintage car competition, and more.

This year, the Museum & Cultural Center has decided to support the NWSCC's 30th Anniversary Celebration in place of the Heritage Day.

The Mt. Hood Museum & Cultural Center will be the beneficiary of the proceeds from the Auction held at the 30th Anniversary Party. These funds will be used for numerous improvements at the Museum, such as:

- a) Adding an elevator for ADA accessibility to all 9,000 square feet of floor space.
- b) Creating more space for exhibits.
- c) The addition of a new "Clubhouse" gallery, which will showcase all the outdoor clubs that have called Mt. Hood home. Each club will have exhibit space to showcase their club's history.
- d) Expansion of the Museum's office and store.

So, remember, you can help the Mt. Hood Museum by attending the NWSCC 30th Anniversary event, and participating in the Auction (which will include trips to Vail, Sun Valley and Maui) . See page 7 for details.

Also, remember to visit the Museum when in Government Camp. It is located just a few houses up the road from Huckleberry Inn (on the opposite side of the road). See: www.mthoodmuseum.org.

The Great Ski Pole Rescue Hike

- by Linda McGavin-

Many of you know Bruce and me as intrepid skiers who like to search out the steep and the deep, and this tale results from one of our adventures down the S&R Cliffs at Mt. Hood Meadows off the Heather chair. We had found some perfect powder turns which ended up on one of the cliffs, and a very narrow steep draw led to the Heather Canyon runout, with impassible cliffs on both sides. A slight mishap led to Bruce's pole sliding down about 20 feet into Clark Creek, followed by a bunch of sloughed snow from a snowboarder who came down the same way. We came back later and marked the spot with our GPS so we could look for the pole when the snow melted.

July 26 was the chosen day. Bruce's daughter, Tracy Petersen, joined us at the Hood River Meadows parking lot about 9 am, since Bruce wanted to try to walk up Heather Canyon to where the pole was last seen. The runout starts out with a field of blue lupine and a tiny path wending through it, which soon disappeared. It turns out there isn't really any trail up Heather Canyon in the summer, and we found ourselves bushwacking the entire way.

Our trek led us through areas of waist high brush, up steep banks along the creek which sometimes forced us up into the woods, and scrambling over rocks along the creek when we could get down to it. Clark Creek in July is glacial runoff, ice cold, and really rushing along. It was really hard to locate the actual

Heather Canyon runout, as the creek apparently goes back and forth under it in places, and the winter snow smooths out what is really a very rough area. Near God's Wall the steep creek banks forced us uphill, and we had to cross that area holding onto twigs so that we didn't slip downhill. (It's SO much easier to ski down in the winter!) When we got close to where the GPS showed we should seriously start looking, the creek ran right along the cliff, and we HAD to find a place to jump across it, bracing ourselves with our walking poles in the rushing water.

Linda McGavin and Tracy Petersen

Dang it! This is dustier and steeper than expected!

We walked upstream, and suddenly Bruce saw water flipping up over an orange basket! There it was, wedged into the rocks in the middle of the mainstream of Clark Creek - only about 40 feet from where it fell into the creek all those months ago. Several attempts to snag it didn't do any good, so Bruce took off both shoes and held onto a trekking pole with Tracy holding onto the other end, and was finally able to pull it free! He couldn't get out fast enough - his feet were frozen!

That was 4 hours into this hike, and we were on the other side of the creek. The rest of the adventure led us through swampy areas below Heather, a scramble up underneath the Heather Chair, again clinging to brush, hiking down to the Shooting Star chair and then up to the top of HRM. You would think the rest should have been easy because it's downhill, but again there were no trails, just very uneven ground and massive amounts of beargrass in bloom. The entire hike took 6-1/2 hours. The wildflowers at Meadows are magnificent, and it was a real adventure, but even so, we can truthfully not recommend that anyone try to hike up Heather Canyon in the summer!
